News release

Rain warning - It's getting wetter

11 November 2002

Met Office forecasters have issued a heavy rain warning this morning and will be in close contact with the Environment Agency's flood forecasters over the next few days.

The Met Office's warning predicts that the worst of the rain will fall in southern and eastern Britain between Monday night and Wednesday morning. Following the recent spell of wet weather some local flooding is possible.

Nigel Reed, Head of the Met Office's Operations Centre, said: "The wet weather is set to continue this week. The rain mentioned in this morning's warning will be followed by more later in the week. People living in flood-prone areas, particularly in the south and east, should keep an eye on the latest Met Office weather forecast and flood warnings from the Environment Agency."

For further information:
Met Office Press Office +44 (0)1392 886655

Met Office Customer Centre 0870 900 0100
If you're outside the UK +44 (0)1392 885680

© Crown copyright